The Stonewall School Report 2017 shows that while progress has been made, just two in five LGBT pupils report that their schools say that transphobic bullying is wrong. More than four in five trans young people have self-harmed and more than two in five trans young people have attempted to take their own life.

These figures highlight the importance of providing support and training for schools so that staff feel confident to challenge transphobic bullying and provide appropriate support to young people in relation to their gender identity.
