Safe from Bullying in extended services in and around schools
Contents

Introduction 3

The context 5
  What is bullying? 5
  Bullying in extended services 9
  Why is it important to tackle bullying in extended services 9
  How can bullying be stopped? 10

Preventing bullying 11
  Leadership 11
  Policies 12
  Communication 13
  Training 13
  Partnership with fathers, mothers and carers 15
  Environment 15

Responding to bullying 16
  Support the child or young person who is bullied 16
  Change the emotional environment 17
  Work with the bullying child or young person 17
  Monitor and record 18
  Responding to serious or persistent bullying 18
  How do we know our actions have been successful? 20

Further information, advice and support 21
Safe from Bullying in extended services in and around schools
Introduction

'Bullying should stop!' 12 year old girl at holiday playscheme

'Virtually every child I have met has been affected by bullying, either by being bullied or as the bystander’
Sir Al Aynsley-Green, Children’s Commissioner for England

Young people and parents say bullying is among their top concerns. Bullying can make the lives of victims a misery; it can undermine their confidence and self esteem and can destroy their sense of security.

Bullying can have a life-long negative impact. It makes it difficult for children to learn and can have a lasting detrimental effect on their life chances. Young people who have been bullied can become anxious and withdrawn, depressed or aggressive. Some turn to substance misuse as a way of dealing with the emotional impact of bullying. At worst bullying has been a factor in suicide.

Bullying does not happen only in normal school hours. It can happen anywhere. Children who are badly bullied in school are more likely than others to be bullied both in and out of school. To tackle bullying successfully, the whole community and all services for children and young people need to work together to change the culture so that bullying is unacceptable.

The government has made tackling bullying a key priority. This guidance outlines what bullying might take place in extended services, and the steps that can be taken to prevent bullying happening in the first place and to respond effectively when bullying does occur. It is part of a suite of guidance on preventing bullying outside of schools that includes guidance on tackling bullying in:

- Play and leisure
- Youth activities

2 Katz, A., Stockdale, D and Dabbous, A. (2002) Islington & You; Katz, A, (Young Voice) Buchanan, A & Bream, V.(University of Oxford, Centre for Research into Parenting and Children). (2001) Bullying in Birtain: Male bullies are twice as likely to use alcohol and three times more likely to use an illeal drug ‘to relieve stess’ than peers,13% of bullies vs. 9% of peers said they felt pressurised into using illegal drugs.
5 National Crime Prevention Strategy, Canada. Bullying prevention In Schools section 2.5 Findings that interventions were more successful when the whole community was involved. http://www.publicsafety.gc.ca/res/cp/res/bully-eng.aspx
6 Available at: http://www.everychildmatters.gov.uk/resources-and-practice/IG00363/
Who is this guidance intended for?

This guidance is for all those who work in before/after school provision and holiday playschemes, and managers and staff in extended services in and around schools.

Each of these guidance documents is designed to be used in conjunction with a set of training resources. Because we know that bullying can follow young people between different settings, this suite of guidance also includes guidance for local authorities and others who are in a position to coordinate anti-bullying activities at a local level.

This suite of guidance builds on the existing guidance on bullying in schools: ‘Safe To Learn’, a suite of materials which includes supplementary guidance on racist bullying, homophobic bullying, cyberbullying and bullying involving children and young people with Special Needs and disabilities, and will shortly include bullying related to gender and gender identity. Although Safe to Learn focuses on tackling bullying in school, it contains detailed information on tackling different forms of bullying, which may be useful to staff in extended services.

“4Children passionately believes that every child and young person should be protected from bullying. This guidance will be invaluable to all out of school, play and leisure services, and staff working in extended services in and around schools.”

Anne Longfield, Director, 4Children

This guidance is also supported by the Anti-Bullying Alliance, Action for Children, EACH (Educational Action Challenging Homophobia) and Childnet International.
The context

What is bullying?
Bullying is behaviour, usually repeated over time, that intentionally hurts another individual or group, physically or emotionally. One person or a group can bully others.

How does bullying differ from banter?
- There is a deliberate intention to hurt or humiliate.
- There is a power imbalance that makes it hard for the victim to defend themselves.
- It is usually persistent.

Occasionally an incident may be deemed to be bullying even if the behaviour has not been repeated or persistent – if it fulfils all other descriptions of bullying. This possibility should be considered, particularly in cases of sexual, sexist, racist, or homophobic bullying and when children with disabilities are involved. If the victim might be in danger then intervention is urgently required.

What forms does bullying take?
Bullying includes: name-calling; taunting; mocking; making offensive comments; kicking; hitting; pushing; taking belongings; inappropriate touching; producing offensive graffiti; spreading hurtful and untruthful rumours; or always leaving someone out of groups. It is also bullying when a child or young person is pressured to act against their will by others.

Bullying can sometimes take the form of harassment. This is defined as unwanted conduct which violates a person’s dignity or creates an intimidating, hostile, degrading or humiliating environment.

Increasingly, bullying is happening through new technology. This can involve sending inappropriate or hurtful text messages, emails or instant messages, posting malicious material online (e.g. on social networking websites) or sending or posting offensive or degrading images and videos.

‘Cyberbullying’, as it is often called, might take the form of ‘real world’ bullying being played out online. Situations may be deliberately engineered in order to photograph someone in a humiliating way and circulate this online. It can be particularly insidious, because of the potential to follow children wherever they are, including in extended services.

Bullies may pick on children for no apparent reason, seizing on some aspect of the victim’s appearance, or personality as an excuse to bully them. This kind of ‘mindless’ bullying may be seen as ‘harmless’ fun by the perpetrators, but not by the victim.
However, bullying may also take the form of singling out children because they belong to a particular group. The following sections cover different types of prejudice-based bullying in no particular order.

Racist and religious bullying

Racist bullying can be defined as ‘A range of hurtful behaviour, both physical and psychological, that makes a person feel unwelcome, marginalised, excluded, powerless or worthless because of their colour, ethnicity, culture, faith community, national origin or national status’.

No child should be made to feel inferior because of their background, culture or religion. Forms of racism which are the result of ignorance are hurtful to the recipient and other members of that group. It is vital that all children and young people are valued and learn to respect others. Adults should make their stance against racist behaviour clear to all children so as to discourage racist behaviour and to encourage reporting if it does take place.

Under the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000, all public bodies have a duty to eliminate discrimination, promote equality of opportunity and promote good race relations. Tackling racist bullying is a key part of fulfilling this duty.

Sexual, sexist and transphobic bullying

Sexual bullying includes any behaviour, whether physical or non-physical, where sexuality is used as a weapon by boys or by girls. It can be carried out to a person’s face, behind their back or by use of technology. Sexist bullying refers to bullying simply because the victim is a girl or a boy, based on singling out something specifically gender-linked. Transphobic bullying refers to bullying because someone is, or is thought to be, transgender.

While young people may express an acceptance of sexual, sexist or transphobic insults because they are widely used, such insults are often used to bully someone. Inappropriate touching can also be a form of bullying and harassment, and may escalate into abuse. Similarly, ‘jokes’ about sexual assault, or rape, if unchallenged, can create an atmosphere in which this behaviour is seen as more acceptable.

Homophobic bullying

Homophobic bullying targets someone because of their sexual orientation (or perceived sexual orientation). It can be particularly difficult for a young person to report, and is often directed at them at a very sensitive phase of their lives when identity is being developed. What might be called banter can be deemed harassment if it is at the expense of someone’s dignity and meant offensively. The term ‘gay’ as an insult is unacceptable and should always be challenged, as such use can create an atmosphere in which a young person feels denigrated and even hounded. The term ‘gay’ is sometimes used as a proxy for racist or disablist bullying because young people may believe they can get away with using these words in an abusive way, whereas racist insults would be challenged by staff.

---

9 Young Voice and Youthworks survey for BBC Panorama more than one in five said these insults were ‘often’ used against them and a further 14% said it happened ‘all the time’. The concern is that young people may come to see it is acceptable. More than one in four thought it was acceptable.
10 Safe to Play (2008) – young people with SEN were significantly more likely than peers to say they had been called ‘gay’. Survey of 4546 children in Dudley.
Adults can find homophobic bullying difficult to challenge, but some excellent resources are available. If homophobia is approached as a rights issue – by arguing the case that everyone has a right to be and feel safe – young people are usually more receptive.

Homophobic bullying has been shown to have an extremely damaging impact, with depression, suicidal thoughts and self-harm reported.

Regulations made under the Equality Act 2006 outlaw discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation in the provision of ‘goods and services’, including those provided by public bodies. The Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) Regulations 2003 also place a duty on employers to protect all staff against discrimination or harassment on the grounds of their sexual orientation.

Disablist bullying

Bullying involving children and young people with disabilities employs many of the same forms as other types of bullying, with name calling and pushing and shoving being common. Additional forms include:

- Manipulative bullying, where the perpetrator tries to get the victim to act in a certain way – do something they should not do – steal from a newsagent for example, when they may not be able to recognise that they should not do this.

- Bullying that exploits a particular aspect of a condition such as sensitivity to sensory stimuli, lights or sounds.

- Conditional friendship where the victim is ‘allowed’ to be in the friendship group only on certain conditions. These are intended to get the victim into trouble or to humiliate them and may put the victim in danger.

- Children with disabilities also report persistent, seemingly ‘low level’ bullying from which there is no let up. Eventually the victim ‘snaps’. This is commonly seen among children on the Autistic spectrum. They can become uncontrollably angry when this occurs, and some are then blamed by adults without looking at the full context behind their behaviour.

- Among children with disabilities of various kinds a hierarchy can develop based on skills. Bullying can occur within such a hierarchy. For example the sighted may bully the unsighted.

- There are typically high levels of bullying between children with emotional and behavioural difficulties, as well as bullying of them by other children.

Young people with disabilities report being bullied in the street, on the bus, in shops or at college. Prejudice against them is evident in the primary years and is resistant to change in the secondary years. It should be addressed as early as possible.

In a recent Mencap survey, 8 out of 10 children with a learning disability had been bullied, and 6 out of 10 said they had been physically hurt by bullying. Eight out of 10 were scared to go out because of bullying.

---

14 Safe To Play (2008).
15 Mencap (2007), Bullying Wrecks Lives – the experiences of children and young people with a learning disability.
The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 makes it unlawful to discriminate against disabled persons in the provision of facilities and services.

Under the Disability Discrimination Act 2005, all public bodies have a duty to have regard to the need to eliminate discrimination and harassment on grounds of disability and promote positive attitudes towards disabled people. Tackling disabled bullying is a key part of fulfilling this duty.
Bullying in extended services

It is expected that all schools will offer access to a core offer of extended services by 2010. Whether the services are on the school site or in a nearby club, managed by the school or a voluntary sector or private organisation, young children and those as old as 14 (17 if they have a disability) are likely to spend considerable time there.

Extended services can help young people to gain new skills and build confidence and resilience. But extended activities can be vulnerable to bullying taking place, especially where children and young people perceive that they are in a less-supervised setting in which to carry on bullying which has started during normal school hours. A few children can find they are always left out or never picked as a partner in games. Others are deliberately victimised. If permitted to continue, these situations can send a message to the group that bullying is acceptable.

Children and young people in extended services who were consulted for this guidance confirmed that bullying can follow victims in and out of school, including to after schools clubs and areas around the periphery of schools such as the school gates. The site most commonly mentioned was in the street, where children may be waiting for buses or to move onto another site. Many of the children and young people we spoke to had experienced name calling, some of which involved the use of racist or homophobic comments.

Why is it important to tackle bullying in extended services

Every young person should feel safe to learn, play and socialise. Whether in after school clubs or holiday playschemes, every young person should be safe from victimisation and discrimination. Their journeys to and from these places should be free from fear and intimidation. No-one should suffer the pain and indignity that bullying can cause.

Bullying and the wider Staying Safe Agenda

Effective anti-bullying practice gives all children and young people the assurance that they take part in extended services in a safe and friendly environment. It upholds their fundamental right to be safe.

If children are being bullied, the achievement of all or any of the five Every Child Matters outcomes may be seriously undermined. Tackling bullying is mentioned explicitly under two of the Every Child Matters outcomes:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Outcome 2: Stay safe</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Aim: Children and young people need to be safe from bullying and discrimination.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Outcome 4: Make a positive contribution</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Aim: Children and young people are helped to develop positive relationships and choose not to bully or discriminate.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

All organisations and adults (paid or unpaid) who work with children owe them a duty of care, and must take all reasonable steps to ensure their safety.

The responsibilities of schools to tackle bullying as part of their duties to promote pupil well being and good behaviour also apply to the extended services which they offer. These responsibilities are covered in the Safe to Learn suite of guidance16.

How can bullying be stopped?

Bullying can only be stopped through a combination of prevention and response. Preventative work is ongoing and sustained. It should provide consistency and a clear framework. When an incident occurs, a response is required to deal with the bullying behaviour and support the victim.

The next two sections of this guidance will outline the steps staff working in extended services can take both to prevent bullying and to respond to it when it occurs.

In practice these measures should complement and supplement any measures put in place by schools to prevent and respond to bullying.
Preventing bullying

As with all steps we take to keep children safe, it is better to intervene early to prevent harm than to wait for incidents to occur. This section sets out the different components of an effective strategy to prevent bullying.

Leadership

Tackling bullying is the responsibility of all who work with children and young people, but having a nominated ‘anti-bullying lead’ from within the staff team provides a focus for anti-bullying work. A member of staff should be nominated as the person who coordinates all anti-bullying activity. This leadership role should include responsibility for:

- Maintaining policies
- Arranging training
- Responding to bullying incidents
- Ensuring that records are kept and
- Linking with the local authority anti-bullying lead and other partners

Ethos

The ethos of the setting is important in creating a welcoming and inclusive environment in which bullying is not tolerated. To create a welcoming, safe ethos:

- Encourage values such as team spirit and respect.
- Model fair and respectful behaviour and leadership.
- Challenge all forms of prejudice and promote equality.
- Discourage children and young people from colluding with bullying – bystanders and those who reinforce the bullying behaviour are contributing to it.

Adopting and displaying a charter of rights can help to make these principles clear. See Training Resources for further suggestions about challenging prejudice and encouraging respect.

17 Richardson, R. and Miles, B. 2008 Racist incidents and bullying in schools, Trentham Books
18 See 3: What should an Anti-Bullying policy include
Policies

An anti-bullying policy is an important way for everyone to understand what behaviour is acceptable, what is unacceptable and how bullying will be dealt with.

- Involve young people in setting rules and developing policies.
- Ensure that the policy covers different kinds of bullying, (e.g. sexual bullying, cyberbullying and prejudice driven bullying).
- Publicise anti-bullying policies and rules. Make sure all young people and staff are fully aware of this policy and how it is put into practice – invite young people to design posters.

Case Study: CHIPS

CHIPS – ChildLine in Partnership with Schools – worked in partnership with 4Children to create a resource that playleaders could use to address the issues of bullying within their clubs. The book contained best practice information on areas such as developing an anti-bullying policy but also contained a range of practical activities which could be delivered direct with young people in order to address the issue.

Research by 4Children found that bullying was an important issue for 9 out of 10 out of school childcare providers surveyed. The study found inconsistencies between schools and childcare providers in dealing with bullying.

Less than half of the childcare providers discussed their anti-bullying policy with the schools attended by the children who used their service.

The development of integrated children’s services – with extended schools and children’s centres as community hubs – presents the opportunity for increasingly joined up anti-bullying strategies. Extended services providers have a vital role to play in this.

From No Bullying! A practical resource for developing and implementing anti-bullying policies, 4Children in association with ChildLine, 2005
Ensure that the policy is revised and updated regularly in consultation with young people.

Align the Anti-Bullying policy to the school policy (or policies if children attend from more than one school) so that children and young people can see there is a consistent approach.

Communication
Effective communication is key to create an environment where bullying is not tolerated.

- Make sure everyone knows what bullying is and what they can do if they see it or experience it, by providing regular training sessions for staff and discussing with children and young people.21
- Make it clear that bullying and harassment are unacceptable, and set out what the consequences are for those who bully.
- Inform children, young people, parents and staff of the anti-bullying policy.
- Include a section on bullying in any welcome pack for young people, in a child friendly version. Staff will also need a guide to the anti-bullying policy and procedures.
- Use and promote positive images and language. Positive images of disability and diversity celebrate difference and pride.
- Provide links to useful helplines, websites and local voluntary sector groups.

Communicate ideas and suggestions from young people via an ideas board or poster/manifesto displays which convey the message that bullying is unacceptable.

Display and celebrate children and young people’s contributions to reducing bullying and creating a friendly and respectful atmosphere.

Training
The effectiveness of the anti-bullying policy will depend on how well staff are trained to tackle bullying. Advice on training is available in most regions of England through the Anti-Bullying Alliance. It can also be commissioned from a number of organisations (see Training Resources for more information). The Local Safeguarding Children Board and/or local authority anti-bullying lead may also be able to provide support and training, or train the anti-bullying lead to provide it themselves.

As a result of training, staff should:

- Understand the anti-bullying policy, and their role in implementing it.
- Know how to spot bullying, including understanding different types of bullying (e.g. the different ways boys and girls tend to bully).
- Know how to respond appropriately if they witness bullying or young people report it.
- Know which partner agencies may be able to offer help and know how to access that help.

See http://www.everychildmatters.gov.uk/resources-and-practice/IG00363/
The anti-bullying lead should also consider whether there are specific training needs in the setting. For example, staff may feel they need particular support in addressing homophobic bullying, or cyberbullying.

In order to respond effectively to bullying when it happens, it may be valuable to train key staff (e.g. the anti-bullying lead) in mediation, restorative justice, or conflict resolution techniques (see Resources).

Children and young people themselves can also play an important role in preventing bullying. This might include training young people as peer supporters or mediators.

Practices

There are a number of specific practical steps which settings can take to reduce the likelihood of bullying happening:

- Consult children and young people about bullying, whether they feel safe, and if there are places where they feel unsafe (at the breakfast/after school club, holiday playscheme or school, or travelling between the two).

- Be vigilant if a young person has clothing or equipment damaged.

- Challenge all forms of prejudice.

‘Thank you for this, I always wanted to tell someone’ 9 year old boy in after school club

It is also important to build the capacity of children and young people to respond to bullying themselves:

- Help young people to develop their own resilience and strategies for preventing bullying. These can include ‘fogging’ techniques such as seeming to agree with the bully, deflecting the hurt or refusing to provide the reaction the bully hopes for. Or the ‘stuck record’ technique in which a child repeatedly calmly says ‘No, I don’t want to’. Rehearse responses children may feel comfortable using, so that they have a few phrases or a ‘special sentence’ ready. Practice with the child some assertive body language that gives off a confident air even if the child feels afraid.

- Make sure children, young people and parents/carers know how to report bullying.

- Train peer support for resolving conflicts (see Training Resources).

- Build emotional resilience and well-being through activities. Group work that builds trust between the participants can reduce feelings of isolation. Drama and role-play can help make bullying incidents seem less intimidating and model effective responses.

- Where suitable, a ‘support’ group of trained children can be put in place around a child who needs this.22

- Celebrate or display initiatives by young people to tackle bullying and to be supportive to others. Display their work, award prizes or enter their work into competitions.

- Teach children and young people the language of decision making and negotiation. Ask open ended questions and avoid questions that invite a simple ‘yes’ or ‘no’ as this does not allow them to explore the problem or describe issues of concern to them. Encourage children and young people to use a wider range of words to express how they feel, so that they can be helped before their emotions overwhelm them and so that they can use language to resolve conflicts without bullying.

---

- Encourage children and young people to take part in structured meetings to discuss any concerns about bullying.

Partnership

An effective response to bullying relies on a close partnership between staff in extended services and the school and other practitioners who work with children:

- Ensure a close partnership and good communication with other staff in the schools the children attend.

- Develop contacts with local partner agencies and the Community Safety manager, as well as your local authority anti–bullying lead.

- Collaborate with local transport providers to ensure that children travel to and from the service safely. A contracted transport provider (e.g. school pick-up minibus) can be asked to observe the anti-bullying policy and respond with specific steps in relation to bullying and unacceptable behaviour.

Partnership with fathers, mothers and carers

- In many cases, partnership with fathers, mothers and carers will be key to success. Make sure they know that bullying is unacceptable in the setting.

- Parents need to know how to report any concerns about bullying, and what steps are taken in response.

- Parenting support provided as part of extended services may be particularly valuable in supporting the parents of a child who is bullying others to address this behaviour.

Environment

Managing the environment can help reduce bullying. Provide quiet spaces where young people can be guaranteed time to themselves or spaces to act as ‘social havens’. In a noisy environment where sensory stimuli can overwhelm some young people with special needs, it is helpful to provide chill out zones.

Offer a wide range of games and activities so that those who are not good at a particular activity are not left out. Consult children on spaces where they do not feel safe and rearrange equipment or supervision patterns to eliminate these.

---

Responding to bullying

When bullying does occur, a clear consistent response is essential. There are many different ways in which staff can respond to bullying. However, the goals of any intervention should always be the same:

- To make the victim safe.
- To stop the bullying and change the bully’s behaviour.
- To make clear to every other child and young person that bullying is unacceptable.
- To learn lessons from the experience that can be applied in future.

If bullying is reported, the member of staff to whom it is reported should immediately investigate so as to understand the nature of the concern. They should contact the anti-bullying lead or manager.

Bullying is complex behaviour and if it is not clear who the perpetrator is, it may be more productive to focus on the future than to spend time while each party denies it. In such cases steps could be taken to agree with the young people how they will behave in future.

Support the child or young person who is bullied

The starting point for any intervention should be to talk to the person who has been bullied, establish what has happened and agree a way forward:

- Make time to listen to the child or young person who has been bullied calmly, using effective listening techniques.
- Take bullying seriously and avoid telling young people to ‘just ignore it’.

Skills for effective listening

Invite and encourage talk.
Consider your body language – sit down, make eye contact.
Repeat and clarify what the child or young person tells you.
Be comfortable with silence.
Summarise the problem.
Encourage the child or young person to come up with ideas about next steps.
Agree an action plan with his or her consent.

Avoid humiliating the victim by taking actions which make them seem weaker, powerless or a ‘grass’.

Help the victim become more resilient, for example by building up their self-confidence, emphasising their strengths and helping them to develop protective friendships.

Cyberbullying can be traced and tracked to find proof of the bullying so it becomes less of a question about one person’s word over another.

Change the emotional environment

Address any prejudice exhibited with the whole group – whether within the setting or outside it. If a group of children are behaving in a prejudice driven way – perhaps against disabled people or in a racist way – this needs to be addressed with the whole group. A guest may be invited in to talk to them, a film chosen or some other form of challenge to their accepted view presented to them.

Work with the bullying child or young person

Work with the bullying child to help them understand their behaviour and its effects on others. The overall goal is to ensure the bullying stops and the bully’s behaviour changes:

- Make it clear that it is the behaviour that is ‘bad’, not the child or young person.
- How does bullying make them feel? Why do they need to do this?
- Help children and young people to find other ways than bullying to feel recognised and to manage their emotions. Help a child to learn to recognise their emotions. Is there a warning moment before they ‘kick off’? What skills can be used before it all becomes ‘too much’? Are there patterns to this behaviour – for example on certain days or situations? Try to identify what works for this child. Anger management and conflict resolution skills can be taught.
- Try to elicit some understanding of the feelings of the victim, and challenge any prejudice such as racism. Prejudiced views might be shared among the community in which they live or be driven by anxieties about identity and territory. Children and young people may adopt these views in order to be accepted into a group. By engaging with these concerns rather than dismissing them, it may be possible to help all the young people as well as the one leading bullying.
- How can this person make amends or compensate the victim for the distress caused? Can the child or young person offer some ideas?
- Be aware that many people who bully others have been victims at some point themselves and may still be one. These cases might be more complex and ‘bully victims’ as they are known may need professional help and counselling.
- Avoid granting the bully hero status or marginalising them so that you have no influence.

Sometimes a child or young person who bullies will be relieved to change their behaviour because they have been uncomfortable with it. They may have been pressured by a group into behaving this way. Others may alter their behaviour because they understand the harm they have caused and wish to change.

Monitor and record

Bullies will often appear to comply – but bully someone else, or bully more secretively so that they do not get caught. They can appear to comply because of strong controls strictly enforced, but it is unclear whether or not their behaviour and prejudices have really changed. So consider whether your intervention has secured lasting change and check from time to time.

Encourage and praise positive behaviour by the bullying child or young person.

- Monitor the situation.

- Record any bullying incidents and action taken, including incidents on the way to the setting.

- Report back to the victim.

- Follow up, discreetly, with the victim to make certain the bullying has actually stopped and that they feel safe.

- Do nothing to perpetuate the image of a child as a permanently weak victim, but try to put across a positive strong image of them instead.

- Help the victim to come to believe in themselves, starting with small steps.

- Use an incident as a learning opportunity for everyone.

- Provide relevant information on bullying to the appropriate school so that they can take steps if necessary.

Responding to serious or persistent bullying

Sometimes bullying involves a specific serious incident, such as a serious physical or sexual assault. Bullying might persist despite attempts to intervene. In this kind of situation, a different response may be required, but the goals of the intervention remain the same: to make the victim safe and to stop the bullying behaviour.

The anti-bullying policy should set out a clear process of escalation for dealing with serious and persistent bullying, explaining the roles of the anti-bullying lead, other members of staff and parents in making decisions.

Check your practice

- Do you make sure that individuals are not ridiculed in front of others?

- Do you notice if one young person or a group is being targeted?

- Do you look at seemingly small incidents to see if there is a pattern?

- Do you know where to get help if a serious case of bullying emerges?

- Do you ensure you never leave children unsupervised?

- Do you encourage all children to make sure that all children develop emotional resilience?
Whatever action is taken, staff involved should make sure that all bullying incidents and actions are recorded.

“I was being bullied at school, it went on for ages and I was always alone. I didn’t tell my mum because she worries about me. I had to stay on after school in this club and I thought it would be worse. I hardly spoke to anyone and I just tried to stay out of the way. One day this lady taught me to play chess. This was really great ‘cos I’m not good at most things but I could do this. Slowly I made friends with another boy who played chess and we always meet now. I look forward to going to the club. More people are playing chess now. We might play a match against another team.”

10 year old boy

Working with Partners

If a serious incident or persistent pattern of bullying occurs, staff should engage with other practitioners to agree a joined up response. Schools, colleges, and the community safety team may have a role here. Schools have a power under Section 89 (5) of the Education and Inspections Act (2006) to impose sanctions for bad behaviour which takes place out of school and it may be appropriate for these to be part of a joined up response. Where staff are unsure about how to deal with particularly serious or persistent bullying, partner agencies such as the police, the local authority anti-bullying lead and other organisations such as anti-bullying charities may be able to provide advice and support (see Training Resources).

Resolving Conflicts

Even when bullying has been serious or persistent, the most effective response may be to resolve matters between the victim and the bully. Consider using conflict resolution or restorative justice techniques to help young people understand how each other feels, make amends and move on, but only if both parties agree to this approach.

Asking a child or young person to leave

In exceptional cases where all attempts to resolve persistent bullying behaviour have proved unsuccessful and action is needed to make the victim safe, it may need to be necessary to ask the bullying child or young person to leave the group/club. Young people who are the victims of bullying should never be asked to leave for their own protection.

Involving the Police

Bullying behaviour may involve criminal offences, such as assault, theft, criminal damage, harassment offences, misuse of communication offences, hate crime offences or sexual offences. Where bullying is particularly serious or persistent, it may be necessary – in order to protect the victim or get the bully to change their behaviour – to involve the police in dealing with offences that have been committed. The anti-bullying lead should make the decision as to whether to involve the police with the support and consent of senior management.

Although it will be necessary to involve the police in some serious cases, it may be valuable to involve the police in other aspects of your anti-bullying work. For example, in explaining to children how bullying behaviour may constitute crime. This may be a more effective way of building a partnership with local police and Community Support Officers, than only bringing them in once an offence has been committed.
Bullying as a Child Protection Issue

Under the Children Act 1989 a bullying incident should be addressed as a child protection concern when there is ‘reasonable cause to suspect that a child – is suffering, or is likely to suffer, significant harm’. As such, it will sometimes be appropriate to report bullying incidents to social services child protection officers. In making this decision, staff should follow the setting’s child protection procedures. Further guidance on making this kind of decision is contained in the document What to do if You’re Worried if a Child is Being Abused.

Be aware that a child may be bullying because of problems in his or her life and prepare for disclosures. For example, it is not uncommon for children to disclose domestic violence when you talk to them about bullying. Appropriate Child Protection procedures should be applied.

Supporting the victim

In order to make the victim feel safe, he or she may need further support while bullying is being dealt with, or after it has stopped. Trained peer supporters can be asked to support a victim, and a sympathetic adult will need to monitor carefully how the child or young person is doing.

How do we know our actions have been successful?

Regular consultation with young people is the most effective way to find out if anti-bullying interventions are working and young people feel safe. There are three key questions to ask about intervention:

- Does the victim feel safe?
- Did the bully’s behaviour change?
- What have we learned?
Further information, advice and support

4Children: Provides advice, support and publications for extended services, including ‘No Bullying! – a practical resource for developing and implementing anti-bullying policies, 4Children in association with ChildLine, 2005 www.4Children.org.uk.

Anti-Bullying Alliance
www.anti-bullyingalliance.org.uk.

BECTA: For more information on cyberbullying www.becta.org.uk/safeguarding.php.

CEOP (The Child Exploitation Online Protection Centre): Hosts the Young people’s online charter and is responsible for safety on the internet. There is advice for parents and carers and for young people http://www.ceop.gov.uk.

Childnet: For information and materials on a range of online safety aspects such as social networking, being a good digital citizen and cyberbullying http://www.digizen.org/cyberbullying.

Childnet also offers activities, posters and materials on http://www.kidsmart.org.uk.

Leap: Offers training and workshops in confronting conflict and hosts the Academy for Youth and Conflict for formal training leading to qualifications for staff http://www.leaplinx.com.

Mencap: The Don’t Stick it, Stop It! campaign contains stickers and useful materials, such as line animations and video clips, which can be used for training/awareness purposes www.mencap.org.uk/dontstickit.

NSPCC: Offers a wide range of advice and support in this area, including what to do when a child may disclose a further problem such as domestic violence or neglect. Visit www.nspcc.org.uk.

Stonewall: Information on tackling homophobic bullying www.stonewall.org.uk.

Transforming Conflict: For information on restorative practices and training http://www.transformingconflict.org.

A more comprehensive list including ideas for training and suggestions for developing policies is available in the training resources as part of this suite of guidance 25.
This guidance was funded by DCSF, and developed by 4Children, Youthworks Consulting and Young Voice, supported by an Advisory Group. We would like to thank the Advisory Group for their considerable assistance, including:

Emily Arkell NSPCC
Hilary Chamberlain Parentline Plus
Issy Cole-Hamilton Play England
Fergus Crow Anti-Bullying Alliance
Will Gardner Childnet
Lindsay Gilbert ChildLine
Ian Gwenlan ATCO, West Sussex County Council
Sarah Hargreaves National Youth Agency
Justin Jardine Greenwich Leisure Ltd
Shaun Kelly Action for Children
Terri Kinnison BECTA
Sarah Mepham MENCAP
Deborah Ribchester Association of Colleges
Sue Steel Anti-Bullying Alliance
Malcolm Tungatt Sport England

We would also like to thank:
Toni Bretell
Rebecca Calnan
Fiona Ellis
Nors Jackson
Finn McKay, Anti-Bullying Coordinator, Cambridge Education@Islington
John Mitchell – Learning Space
Rhiannon Prys Owen
John Stead
Jenny Drew, EACH